of recollections of the last years of Napoleon III., under the signature "Fidus." They include the following version of what passed on the eve of the declaration of war, which is said to have been obtained from M. Louvet, who was Minister in 1870: The Emperor now believed he was sure from what was told him, that all was ready. and as regards material this was true. Only one thing troubled him. If a war had to be made, there was no man capable of directing it. In this state of affairs the Council of Ministers met. A decision had to be or six o'clock—the Duc de Grammont said "Here is what I propose. Call a congress of the great powers, which will settle the dispute and enforce the decision. Whatever it is, we shall be pro-tected and war will be evaded. If the congress wishes the Prince of Hohenzollern to reign in Spain we have nothing to fear from it. What the Spanish are is known; they will not support him. His reign will be short, and we shall have no ground for self-reproach. Let us, then, hand over the decision of this great affair to a Congress. That means no longer war, but

No sooner was the proposal made than the expression on the face of the ministers changed. All were enthusiastic. "It is deliverance," said the Emperor. "It is unanimously approved of. There is no use in making further inquiry until we have the Congress. M. Ollivier," added the Emperor, "this resolution must be at once communicated to the Chambers. They are still sitting, and you have time to go to the Chamber of Deputies. Go into the room at the side and draw up a short declaration, which you will read to us and then communicate to the Chamber. I, however, will tell the President to continue the sitting."

remained there for a long time, and, whether through fatigue or unwillingness, he, who generally was such an able writer, came back with an utterly unsuitable declaration, which met with approval from no one, and which he himself confessed was insufficient. In consequence it was decided that the matter should be delayed to the next day, that M. Ollivier should prepare at leisure what was required and that the document should be read next day in the Chamber. A message was sent to the President that he might close the sitting, and the Council separated after agreeing to meet next day at 9 o'clock.

go to St. Cloud, was cheered by the crowd collected in the square and on the quay. The crowd called for war, without under standing all that it meant. On arriving at several persons, who had brought the news King of Prussia had dismissed M. Benedetti. telling him that he had nothing further to add. Count Bismarck had circulated and published this false statement throughout all Germany in order to compromise everything, to force the hand of France, and to rounded the Empress, and who had been invited to stay to dinner, were indignant. They yied with each other in expressing most forcibly the necessity for replying to the insolence by a declaration of war. They said: "It is impossible to draw back; to besi tate would be shameful." The Empress received these ardent words as accorded with her warm temperament and Spanish pride. Nothing but the "Marseillaise" was wanting in the drawing room at St. Cloud. This was the news received on his arrival by the unfortunate Emperor, who had left the Tuileries reassured, and so full of confidence and hope. We saw at once the consequences of this new incident. The Congress had become impossible. The declaration could not be made. Other resolutions should be taken; other means sought for. Could war be avoided? There had been the closest approach to an escape. If the declaration had been made at 6 o'clock in the Chamber, there would have been an end to the difficulty; now all had to be begun again.

THE CROW AND THE HARE .- A Crow and a Hare met by chance one day, and were so well Pleased with each other that it was "The first thing in order," remarked the Crow, "is to select a Home, which will, of course, belong to both of us. Have you got your eye on any particular Tree?"

"Tree!" echoed the Hare, "why, we want Burrow, of course." "Burrow! But I can't live in a Hole!" "And I can't Climb a Tree!"

"If you didn't intend to consult my Wishes, why did you Propose this Partnership."
